

people doing strange things with electricity

The next dorkbot-nyc meeting will take place at 7PM on Wednesday, December 4, 2013 at ThoughtWorks. The meeting is free and open to the public. PLEASE BRING SNACKS AND DRINKS TO SHARE!!! WE ARE HUNGRY!!!

Featuring the chronomentrophobic ramblings of:

Chris Jordan: swings

Chris will be presenting two different kinetic light art installations over the past 4 months involving swings. The first is titled Silo Swing, a public art installation commissioned by Flint Public Art Project. The second titled, Momentum, was installed for one week in Guadalajara Mexico, as part of the Monitor Digital festival.

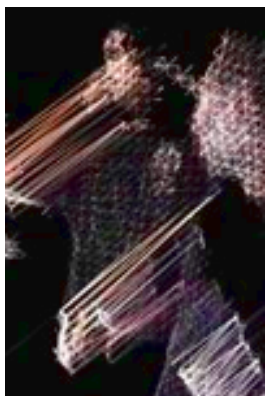

seej.net/create/2013/07/04/silo-swing/ & seej.net/create/2013/09/25/momentum/

Jessica Feldman: speaking skin

Jessica Feldman is a media artist who started out as a composer and now makes public installations, sound art, and interactive sculptures, often using electricity. Much of her work seeks to subvert fixed relationships among the body, technology, (the) media, and intimate psychological and communal social dynamics revealed by contemporary systems of control, surveillance, and censorship. She will discuss some unfinished/in-process/future dorky projects: an installation involving a building wrapped in transductive, vibrating, speaking skin and an interactive sculpture, which uses hacked circuits and arduino to simulate execution rituals.

jessicafeldman.org

Andrew McWilliams: The Hardware Explosion

Hardware is shattering into smaller and smaller pieces. We are heading for an Ambient Computing future, where small, specialized personal devices communicate over cloud-based services and sink into the background, hiding complexity and activating only when needed. Andrew McWilliams is a creative technologist exploring this vision through depth video, depth interaction, and most recently, iBeacons. He will give a whirlwind tour, and introduce projects from the weekly hands-on workshop project 'Hardware Hack Lab'.

jahya.net

<http://dorkbot.org/dorkbotnyc/>

Floor 15, 99 Madison Avenue between 29th & 30th Streets, Manhattan, NYC

flyer by Joel Schlosberg (joelschlosberg@gmail.com)